To the Consumers of Dry Goods: The mercantile community knows best to what extent the consequences of the present political muddle have injured the trade. What on the first day of November promised to be a golden harvest for all classes of merchants and capitalists has since turned into a great commercial suspense and uncertainty. Hence good merchants, dealing in fashlonable goods, the values of which change with the barometer of every day, will not hang their fortunes on the gossamer thread of politicians' webs. Guided by these convictions.
